

Yemen Emergency Crisis Response Project: Women in Crisis Cash-for-Work

Gender Equality · Good practice · Yemen

Quality score: 37/100

Evidence strength: Cautionary / limited

Summary

Since 2016 the World Bank-financed Yemen Emergency Crisis Response Project has paid roughly 423,000 conflict-affected Yemenis for short-term work, of whom 22.8% (about 96,000) were women, alongside women recruited as community health and nutrition educators.

Key dimensions

Dimension	Score
Transferability / replicability	1/3
Impact on gender equality	0/1
Effectiveness	0/1
Efficiency	0/1
Evaluated outcomes	1/1
Sustainability	0/1
Achievement / evidence	1/1
Gender-mainstreaming embedding	0/1
Curator validation	1/1

Evaluated by C-NAPSE

Data sources

C-NAPSE web research — accessed 2026-07-11

World Bank \(IDA\), Yemen Social Fund for Development & Public Works Project, UNDP — accessed 2026-07-11

World Bank: Cash for Work — Changing Yemeni Women's Lives — accessed 2026-07-11

UNDP: YECRP Fast Fact Sheet — accessed 2026-07-11

World Bank: Disclosable ISR, YECRP \(Seq. 09\) — accessed 2026-07-11

UN Yemen: YECRP report — accessed 2026-07-11

UNICEF Yemen: YECRP — accessed 2026-07-11

Cite this — Evidoria. Yemen Emergency Crisis Response Project: Women in Crisis Cash-for-Work. Persistent ID: 90f55005-fd1b-4c23-b36f-d6831c209be0.